~~The~~ There can be no social justice without economic prosperity, but economic prosperity without social justice is meaningless.

The Preamble of the Indian constitution holds a promise to build a nation that ensures justice, liberty, equality, fraternity for all its citizens. This vision is also reflected in our Directive Principles of State Policy, especially Articles 38 and 39. Article 38 calls upon State to ensure social order based on justice while Article 39 directs the state to ensure wealth and resources do not remain concentrated in a few hands. In a country where inequality walks hand in hand with growth it becomes

These ideals remind us that true prosperity is about inclusion and dignity for every individual.

Social justice refers

Although economic growth is vital for national development, its benefits often remain concentrated in the hands of few people. India's post-liberalisation era is one such example. The Oxfam report also says that top 1% of the population controls 40% of the wealth. This shows us that growth without distributive justice deepens inequality.

Thomas Piketty in his book, "From British Raj to Billionaire Raj" highlighted how unchecked capitalism leads to wealth concentration. He says that the rate of return on investment is much larger than rate of return on capital deepening the inequality and eroding social justice.

Also, capitalism with consumerism, commodification and competition have led to a society where human worth is measured by market value. Everything has a price including clean water and air. Yuval Noah Harari in his book, "21 Lessons for 21st century" also says that liberty today is under threat because of algorithmic manipulation.

Capitalism is shaping not just markets but our minds too. Social justice demands a recognition of human dignity beyond profit.

Environmental degradation is another dark side of unequal economic growth. Brandt said, "Earth has enough to satisfy everyone's need but not enough to satisfy everyone's greed." Rapid industrialisation driven by growth has led to ecological disaster that affect the poor the most. The people least responsible for climate change suffer its worst consequences. A truly prosperous nation must ensure that economic progress does not come at the cost of environmental justice. Sustainable development, therefore, must walk hand-in-hand with

It is here that Schemes like MGNREGS aimed at livelihood security and Right to Education, Right to Food became critical in bridging inequalities and promoting social justice. But these rights only became a reality when the nation had achieved a certain level of economic stability. Economic prosperity increased the capacity of State to invest in these schemes turning constitutional ideals into lived reality. Economic prosperity became the foundation on which social justice measures can be meaningfully implemented.

However, still challenges remain. While economic indicators show growth and new technologies make headlines, millions of people still suffer from hunger, poverty, unemployment, issue of jobless growth and growthless jobs. John Rawls in his theory of justice says that a just society is one in which the least advantaged are benefitted first. He further says that growth is justified when it strengthens the position of the poorest in the society.

The onset of Industrial Revolution 4.0 marked by AI, machine learning, automation, data capitalism has further intensified the challenges. They have displaced traditional livelihoods, widened the digital divide and concentrated resources in the hands of few. Social justice must grow hand in hand with economic prosperity and technological progress. It should ensure that the benefits of development reach everyone leaving none behind.

To ensure that prosperity does not come at the cost of justice, the idea of Ramrajya offers a solution. It is not a utopian ideal. For Mahatma Gandhi, Ramrajya means a society grounded in Swaraj (self-rule), non-violence, truth. It is a society that aims for inclusive governance, community led development. It follows the principle of Sarvodaya i.e., the upliftment of all. Ramrajya is
